HYATTSVILLE PAYS TRIBUTE TO WAR HEROES

Funeral Services Held for Corp. M. B. Snyder and Pvt. G. W. Farmer.

HYATTSVILLE, Md., Sept. 19.—With full military and civil rites, funeral services for Corp. Maurice B. Snyder and Private George W. Farmer, the first men from Hyattsville to lose their lives in the world war, were held this morning at the National Guard Armory here.

Business in the town was at a standstill while the services were being held. All flags flew at half-staff. Hundreds of relatives of the heroes crowded the large drill room of the armory, where the bodies lay in state since Saturday.

Participating in the services were the Rev. George R. Miller, pastor of the Ninth Street Christian Church, Washington; the Rev. Mr. Browning, assistant rector at the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, and chaplain of Snyder-Farmer Post of the American Legion; former Mayor Matthew F. Halloran of Hyattsville. Capt. John N. Brooks, commanding Company F, 11th Infantry, to which unit Snyder and Farmer were attached, had charge of the military phase of the services.

After the services the bodies were escorted to Arlington Cemetery, where interment was made. The Rev. Mr. Miller officiated at the grave.

Fossilized portions of a ship, believed to be over 5,000 years old, have been discovered near Woking, England.

FAY KING WRITES ON SAINT-LIKE VAMPS AND VAMPISH SAINTS

Both Out for Dough, and Live Their Own Lives on the Side.

By FAY KING.

You never can tell! Here's one dame all set up on a pedestal, rigged up to look like a saint, and everybody thinks she's just sent down from Heaven to play a few seven-reelers, and first thing you know tumble over she goes and you discover she is a regular little vamp.

On the other hand we have a shimmy dancer who shakes her shoulders nightly in a gilded cafe, and come to chat with her out of business hours she's got simpler and more wholesome ideas about things than the little dames playing so innocent.

A saint-like stare, a precious pout, and every one believe in you.

A suggestive shrug, a bared back and everyone condemns you.

And still it seems to me better to seem worse than we are than to seem better than we are.

I'm getting so I never suspect a dame unless she is demure.

If I had the ability to write a play I'd doll up a dame like the villainess and have her busy up to the last minute saving everybody from destruction by the demure little demon known as the ingenue.

Oh, well! It's all in the game for gain.

One dame knows that she can play the angel child and get away with it, so she frills and ruffles up in organdie or rags best fitted to put her over with the public and snicklers while she rakes in the shekels and lives her own life on the side.

The other dame is also out for the dough, and not having a saint-like map to match her soul, she finds that she can make more by shaking her shoulders.

And she lives her own life. One has the game without the name, the other has the name without the game.

Of course, the one inspires with her work, and so perhaps, after all, it is better that the public life be the one that inspires than the private life, for in their public life they have a greater audience; but isn't it too bad that when people are so placed through fame or fortune or family, that they may be a great and good example to the world, they fall short and do disappointing things that influence others?

As Babe Ruth says, clouting another home run, "Tis ever thus!"

How quickly it heals!
